the trans-continental run from New York to San Francisco in the three-ton Packard truck. Many incidents worth noting marked the return journey.

To demonstrate that a motor truck is practical as a means of freight transportation from Denver to Idaho Springs, a party of Denver business men made the request that the trans-continental Packard be sent on a trial trip.

"Probably a new motor could make the grade. We want to know whether one which has seen rough usage can," they said. In about twenty-five miles the climb is over three thousand feet and in negotiating the Floyd Hill the truck surmounted one of the greatest difficulties of Colorado travel. The trip was made in six hours, and was the first shipment by motor truck ever made over those mountain roads. The plan now is to establish a regular freight and passenger motor truck service between the two cities.

Automobile Notes

The Cadillac

Extraordinary interest in the solution of the problem of electric starting and lighting by the Cadillac Company has by no means been confined to the laity.

For the past thirty days the Cadillac plant has been a sort of "Mecca" for investigating pilgrims from all parts of the country—engineers, manufacturers and experts of every class and description interested in studying the process by which a long-desired luxury has been added to the operation of motor cars.

During the past week, for instance, three delegations especially interesting because of their personnel sought and secured prompt and cheerful permission to spend a portion of the day in going through the Cadillac plant.

These delegations were headed by the personal managers of three of the largest automobile plants, accompanied by their engineering staffs.

The three plants in question, market products ranging from the highest price to the medium standard; and in each instance all thought of professional rivalry was laid aside.

In this respect the attitude of the manufacturing world toward the Cadillac Company is probably unique. Other manufacturers, no matter how keen their competition with the car itself may have no hesitancy in conceding their appreciation of Cadillac methods; and taking advantage of the opportunity which is always cordially given them to study these methods at their leisure.
